

Caring for your poinsettia

Let the soil dry out between watering. When the soil is dry to the touch—usually after 4-6 days—remove from the foil, place in a sink or tub, and water well. Let the plant sit and drain until no water is dripping through the bottom before returning to foil or other container.

Poinsettias like lots of bright, indirect sunlight and are sensitive to extreme temperature, so don't place your plant next to a heater or near a drafty window or doorway. They also prefer humidity but will do fine anywhere in the house that isn't too hot or too cold.

Caring for your poinsettia

Let the soil dry out between watering. When the soil is dry to the touch—usually after 4-6 days—remove from the foil, place in a sink or tub, and water well. Let the plant sit and drain until no water is dripping through the bottom before returning to foil or other container.

Poinsettias like lots of bright, indirect sunlight and are sensitive to extreme temperature, so don't place your plant next to a heater or near a drafty window or doorway. They also prefer humidity but will do fine anywhere in the house that isn't too hot or too cold.

Caring for your poinsettia

Let the soil dry out between watering. When the soil is dry to the touch—usually after 4-6 days—remove from the foil, place in a sink or tub, and water well. Let the plant sit and drain until no water is dripping through the bottom before returning to foil or other container.

Poinsettias like lots of bright, indirect sunlight and are sensitive to extreme temperature, so don't place your plant next to a heater or near a drafty window or doorway. They also prefer humidity but will do fine anywhere in the house that isn't too hot or too cold.

Caring for your poinsettia

Let the soil dry out between watering. When the soil is dry to the touch—usually after 4-6 days—remove from the foil, place in a sink or tub, and water well. Let the plant sit and drain until no water is dripping through the bottom before returning to foil or other container.

Poinsettias like lots of bright, indirect sunlight and are sensitive to extreme temperature, so don't place your plant next to a heater or near a drafty window or doorway. They also prefer humidity but will do fine anywhere in the house that isn't too hot or too cold.